RESOURCES AND PROGRAMS

The Center for Economic Education is more than just economics. You don't have to be an economics or business teacher to take advantage of our resources and programs. Economics is intertwined with many disciplines, for example, geography, history, psychology, philosophy, civics and government, law, business, finance, the environment, and math.

Many of the following resources are available in the new CEE library, McComsey Hall 329. Our new library includes lots of space to review various materials, information about upcoming workshops and events, and a computer for checking out great resources available online. Plan a visit to the center to just look around or talk to the staff about your particular teaching and resource needs. Individually or as a group, just give us a call and we will set up an appointment that is convenient for your busy schedule.
