SPEAKERS

Mark Weakland

Teaching literacy skills is a dynamic, complex, and exciting process that has been widely researched. As we focus our attention on explicitly and systematically teaching foundational literacy skills, it might be tempting to shift our time away from writing. Attend this summer institute to gain an effective understanding of how writing needs to remain a key component of literacy learning and can support students’ learning of essential literacy skills. Enjoy engaging speakers, hands-on activities, and relevant assignments and readings to help you incorporate the concepts covered during the course into your teaching in the upcoming school year.
