The film, "Fake Clouds," is based on a short story written by Todd Palmer '89, and deals with a family living in the shadow of a nuclear reactor.

The musical score was written and performed by Chad Kinsey '88 and Pete Bernhart, who form the band known as Horizon Project. Previously, they had been members of the Burning Bus band.

On May 17, commencement ceremonies focused on the 790 undergraduates and graduate students. President Joseph A. Caputo delivered the commencement address titled, "We Are Not Alone." In the speech, he said, "[Leadership] is about where you want to go, and where you want others to follow you. It is about your vision of the future, a vision that represents a better place than the present and that serves the needs and the dreams of a large number of people-the very people who will follow and support you."

Called to active duty

During the spring semester, Ian Remsburg was one of the 27 MU students who were called to serve in the military as a result of the war in Iraq. Remsburg, a speech communication major and a guard on the basketball team, is member of the U.S. Army National Guard Reserve. He was informed of his switch to active duty status on February 5, and was gone from campus within a couple of days.

The Registrar's Office assisted students who were called to active military duty by coordinating leaves of absence, processing refunds, and notifying the student's instructors, the Bursar's Office, Financial Aid, and Housing of the student's status.

Spring Fling rolls along

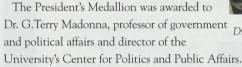

In May, Millersville University students put the books aside and took some time to participate in the annual Spring Fling. Shown here are a couple of the crowd pleasers, "human bowling" and bull riding.

At a ceremony in April, President Caputo and then-President Designate Francine G. McNairy congratulate Dr. Jack Fischel.

President's Medallions

This spring President Joseph A. Caputo presented MU's prestigious President's Medallion to two long-time faculty members: Dr. G. Terry Madonna and Dr. Jack Fischel.

Dr. G. Terry Madonna

Madonna, a member of the Millersville staff since 1967, was presented the award at the Honors & Awards Convocation on May 3. He was given the award for his outstanding work with the University's distinguished Center for Politics and Public Affairs, as well as for his leadership activities associated with the Department of Government and Political Affairs.

Dr. Jack Fischel, retired history professor and co-founder of the internationally recognized Holocaust Conference, was awarded the President's Medallion during the opening ceremonies of the 23rd annual conference, April 6. He began his career at MU in 1965, and although he retired earlier this year, he plans to continue his involvement with the Holocaust Conference.

The President's Medallion is awarded to individuals or businesses and organizations that demonstrate outstanding service, leadership and dedication to the values that are central to the mission of Millersville University.

"Find Your Future. Here."

If you haven't been to campus recently, stop by and take a look...up.

The Millersville streetscape is lined with black and gold banners, hung from light and electric poles, signalling you're entering Millersville University's campus. The banners are not just limited to the streets, but are displayed throughout the campus.

"The banners really give the campus a strong visual identity that's upbeat, current, and energetic," said Jolene Shimp, a senior majoring in speech communication. "It makes a great statement about pride in MU."

The project, which sports over 60 banners, was spearheaded by University Communications and Marketing (UC&M), located in Duncan Alumni House.

The banners also provided an ideal venue to introduce the University's new tagline, "Find Your Future. Here." which captures what Millersville University represents to thousands of students. UC&M worked closely with the Admissions office, as well as faculty and staff to build consensus for the tagline.

The banners, and new tagline, have been a hit-receiving kudos from students, faculty, staff, residents, and visitors to campus.

Marburg Program celebrates 40 years

On September 13, 1963, the first group of students from Millersville, Indiana University of Pennsylvania, Dickinson College, Davidson College, and Southwestern at Memphis students sailed on the Holland-American Line ship Groote Beer from New York City enroute to Southampton and eventually Rotterdam. Little did that first group know that it would be the first of many others to enjoy the thrill of total immersion in a new culture and language. In September 2003 the 41st group will assemble itself in Marburg and enjoy what has become a first-class study-abroad experience.

During Homecoming Weekend on October 18 and 19, the 40th anniversary of the "Millersville in Marburg Program" will be celebrated. Friday evening will include a reception and tour of the newly renovated McComsey Hall, home to the foreign languages program. Saturday will feature campus tours and a special evening reunion, with food, drink, music and sharing opportunities to meet old friends and make new ones.

Emphasis on foreign languages and cultures was heightened by the Cold War in the 1950s and 1960s. As a result, Pennsylvania mandated that all teacher candidates in foreign languages would study at least one year at an institution in the country or region where that candidate's target language was spoken. Individual campuses in the state system were chosen as focal points for each language/culture. Millersville was selected as the cultural center for Germany and Scandinavia.

Students in the program are fully integrated into university life, and each participant is expected to speak German at all times. Current students who are linguistically prepared can enroll in internships which have been organized in a Marburg bank, several schools, and most recently at one of the local newspapers and in one of Marburg University's prestigious research institutes (Sprachatlas). Alumni of the program over the years have entered many different careers such as high school teacher, college professor, college administrator, and lawyer. A significant number have remained in Germany to work at German universities or explore other career paths. Many participants point to the Marburg experience as a turning point in their lives.

To register for the 40th anniversary events, see the Homecoming schedule in fall issue of the Millersville Review. For more information, contact Dr. Leroy Hopkins at 717-872-3525.

MU People

Retirements

Dr. John B. Osborne, professor of history, retired in May. A member of the staff since 1970, he also established the Honors Program, serving as its director for some 19 years.

Dr. Linda Clark-Newman, professor of history, also retired in May after 33 years at MU. She taught both undergraduate and graduate courses.

Designing an historical exhibit

An exhibit titled "Telling Stories: Slavery and Freedom in Lancaster County" stemmed from a teacher course based on the Underground Railroad project spearheaded by Dr. Tracey Weis, associate professor of history. As it turned out, the making of the exhibit panels is a story in itself.

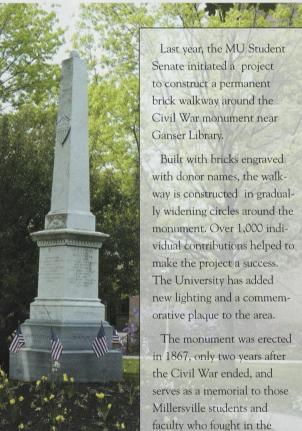

Columbia and Christiana. Created by educators, each panel was accurate in its text, but the presentation of the information and the copies of 19th century photographs and newspaper clippings was often poor. Plus, each panel had its own look, using different typefaces and organizing the information randomly.

That's when Dr. Keith Lauderbach, professor of industry and technology, and his students came to the rescue. It was a chance for the graphic communication students to tackle a very complex project with a "real" client. "It really captured their interest," said Lauderbach, and most of the students regard this as "the best project they ever worked on in their college career."

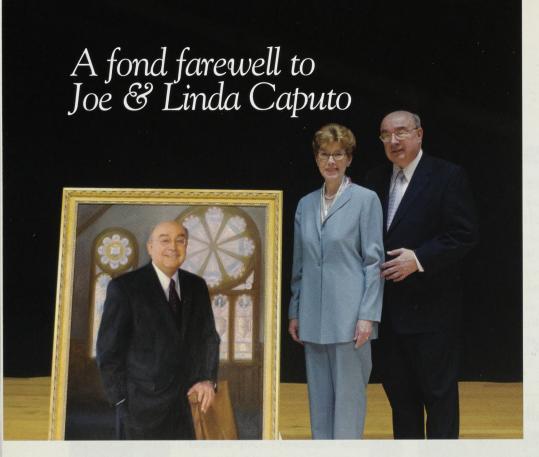

The students developed a design that would work in harmony with the content. The large format required advanced digital and computer skills. Students worked with professionals at UltraGraphics, Inc., on color corrections, adjustments to electronic files, and the actual printing which uses archival inks that should last 200 years. "A lot of research and development went into producing the project," said Lauderbach. The result of partnership between ITEC and the history department was a museum quality exhibition.

"It was a tremendous community-based exhibit that has been getting rave reviews across Lancaster and nationally," according to Weis.

This spring, Linda and Joe Caputo attended the unveiling of his official presidential portrait.

June 30 marked the last day on the job for Joe Caputo. It was a job he held for over 22 years, coming aboard in January of 1981.

For President Joseph A. Caputo, 2003 has been hectic time of preparing the University for a seamless transition in leadership and completing a host of projects. For he and wife Linda, it has also been a bittersweet time of reflection on their accomplishments, saying goodbyes, and graciously accepting many tributes from friends, colleagues, and the community.

Among the many honors and highlights in recent months:

- At MU's commencement ceremonies held May 17, Joe and Linda were awarded honorary Doctorate of Humane Letters degrees for their leadership and involvement in the growth and development of the University.
- The Council of Trustees approved the naming of two campus locations in their honor. The Science & Technology Building will be named Joseph A. Caputo Hall, and a new garden on Wickersham Green will be named the Linda R. Caputo Garden.
- The trustees also commissioned an official presidential portrait of Caputo, which was unveiled at an event on April 27 for the University community.
 - During Alumni Weekend, Dr. Joe Caputo was presented with the Honorary Alumnus Award by Millersville's Alumni Association for his continuous service and dedication to the University.

In May, a retirement dinner (shown below) was held at Bent Creek Country Club. Over 200 people attended the gala event which raised money for the Joseph A. and Linda R. Caputo Endowment in Chemistry, which was established in November 1981 when his presidency was in its infancy. Through the generosity of major donors such as the Alumni Association, APSCUF, the MU Foundation, Student Services, and numerous individual donations, the endowment is now valued at almost $69,000.

During Caputo's tenure, Millersville's academic and student affairs programs also were greatly expanded and strengthened, including the renovation and construction of 18 buildings. In addition, the 12th MU president was often the driving force behind the infusion of state-of-the-art technology into all facets of day-to-day University life. Several years ago he spent a one-semester sabbatical studying ways technology can be used to enhance the quality of teaching and learning.

For over two decades, Mrs. Caputo served as the University's first lady. Trained as a nurse, she was a member of the MU Nursing Advisory Board and involved with the Campus Club. In the community, she has been a long-time volunteer with the Millersville Meals on Wheels program, the Girl Scouts, and on the boards of directors for Vantage of Lancaster and the American Diabetes Association. The Caputos met when they were only in their teens, and have been married for 37 years.

During his address at the May commencement, Joe Caputo summed it all up when he closed by saying, "On a personal note, it has been the most extraordinarily enriching, challenging, and meaningful experience of my life to be president of Millersville University these last 22 years. I owe this institution and its people the deepest debt of gratitude."

FOCUSED CAMPAIGNS Making a Difference

Bulldozers and hard hats seem to be everywhere. And, although it has meant temporary inconveniences to students and faculty, this abundance of construction activity on campus (McComsey Hall, below, and Osburn Hall, inset photo) translates into the achievement of facility and program goals.

MU's focused campaigns have raised $32 million in private gifts and public financing since 1998 towards building, equipment, program, and scholarship goals totalling $35 million.

We can celebrate the success of certain objectives, like programs and scholarships in some cases exceeding goals by two or three times. But to achieve all our goals—especially for buildings and equipment—we must reach beyond the $35 million goal, especially to qualify for matching public funds.

Student Affairs Campaign Hits a Home Run

The targeted campaign aimed at bringing in $290,000 in support of Student Affairs programs, including athletic scholarships, student leadership training, and alcohol abuse prevention initiatives, concluded on June 30 with a total of $1.3 million raised in cash and pledges over the course of the campaign. Fundraising efforts for the Student Affairs programs goals will continue through the Annual Fund.

"A lot of alumni, parents, corporations and friends of Millersville University have generously supported our efforts to provide programs and opportunities that enrich students' educational experiences outside the classroom. For that support, I could not be more grateful," said Dr. Robert Thomas, vice president for student affairs.

STORY BY LARRY ALEXANDER '84

ilmmaker Andrea Campbell '87 is a long way from her original major of chemical engineering. Although her heart was always in broadcasting and the media, Campbell decided on practicality over dreams when she first entered Millersville University. But the lure of the cinema soon drew her back.

"I always had an interest in broadcasting, but thought I'd never get a job," she said. "Eventually, I returned to broadcasting and, so far, it's worked out well. I guess you wind up where you want to be."

As a student she interned at WGAL-TV and after graduation, Campbell went to work at WITF-TV, the public broadcasting station in Harrisburg, where she produced and directed documentaries. While she enjoyed it, she found herself yearning to create work that was her own. She purchased a 16-millimeter camera, and, in 1995, shot a documentary that took her to India and Nicaragua, and paved the way for her new career as an independent filmmaker. Campbell even formed her own production company, Natural Light Films, based in Lancaster.

n 1999, Campbell decided to mark the 20th anniversary of the Three Mile Island nuclear accident by talking to people who lived around the plant at the time.

"I wanted to see what effect, if any, it had on the lives of the people," she said. "But I wasn't making too much progress."

Still wanting to create a work on the psychological effects of nuclear power, she turned to the world of fiction. She contacted an old Millersville acquaintance, Todd Palmer '89, who is the creative director of Virtual Farm Creative, an ad agency based in Phoenixville. Palmer and Campbell's companion, musician Chad Kinsey '88, have been best friends since their days at their Millersville. She contacted Palmer and asked if he "had anything of interest."

"Andrea said she wanted to develop a film based on fiction," Palmer said. "I sent her a number of things I'd written several years earlier." One of Palmer's short stories, "Fake Clouds," struck a chord in Campbell's cinematic soul.

"It was an absolutely perfect story," Campbell said.

The story centered on a young boy growing up in the shadow of the huge cooling towers of a nuclear power plant, with their huge vapor plumes, or fake clouds. Set in the 1970s, when nuclear power plants were seen as a threatening presence, capable of creating catastrophic consequences, the story tells how the boy overcomes his fears, heightened by his youthful imagination, when the warning bells sounding at the plant turn out to be false alarms.

With Palmer's story in hand, Campbell began to lay out her shots by drawing storyboards. Next came casting, which was done locally. "I did the storyboarding, found the actors, and found people to volunteer time to help shoot the main scenes, which we shot in one weekend," she said. Ian Pape, one of Chad's guitar students, was enlisted for the lead role as the boy. And, Banjo the dog was played by a cousin's dog, Kaydee.

Campbell did all of the background shooting herself. The result was "Fake Clouds," an eight-minute film shot in 16mm. Because the project was done on a shoestring budget, based "largely on what I could afford to do at the time," Campbell said, the film was three years in the making.

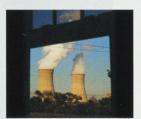

"I'd get some film, shoot it and then get it processed," she said. "Then I had to transfer it to video." Another delay arose when she went to shoot the fake clouds, in the form of the steam plumes at Three Mile Island nuclear power plant. However, TMI had closed for refueling, so the towers stood cold and mute. When the plant got up and running again, it was fall and the trees had lost leaves, forcing Campbell to wait until summer.

With filming and editing finally completed, Campbell needed a musical score, so she again turned to Kinsey. An excellent guitar player and songwriter, Kinsey had won a regional Emmy Award some years earlier for a documentary about people with driving ambitions. He won for a segment on Harrisburg Mayor Stephen Reed. Campbell also won a regional Emmy that year for a series of news documentaries.

Kinsey admits that he and Palmer remember Andrea from Millersville, but she doesn't remember them. However, while at WITF, she interviewed Kinsey for a story on his band, Burning Bus. They discovered they knew many of the same people from their years Millersville and romance eventually bloomed from the encounter.

Kinsey, who can be seen regularly in original shows produced by the American Music Theatre, and once a member of Burning Bus, together with fellow band member, Peter Barnhart, formed the musical duo Horizon Project.

"Peter and I had recorded an album, mostly guitar and percussion, and we had some rough mixes," Kinsey said. "So we combined two of the songs, and it seemed to really work well. I knew we wanted the music for this film to have a timeless quality, and not be identifiable as belonging to any one style like bluegrass, country or rock. So it has no association, but it takes you into world of the film, and you can assign your own emotion to it."

The result of so much time and painstaking labor was a film of stark quality, and it didn't take long for the film to get noticed. Critics at the New Bedford Film Festival praised the film, and it earned an award for "Best Short." Campbell's poignant film also won screenings at film festivals in New England, Canada and Ireland.

Campbell entered "Fake Clouds" in the prestigious Sundance Film Festival in Park City, Utah, to compete against the best of the best. Founded in 1981 by actor Robert Redford, the festival is dedicated to the development of independent artists as a showcase for their finest works. Of the 3,000 films submitted for the competition, hers was one of the 90 or so accepted to the 11-day festival.

"Considering the limited resources we had to work with, to make a film that made it to the Sundance Festival is amazing to me," Palmer said. "I write a lot, and have written a number of short stories, but nothing ever that has been transformed into someLeft to right: Shooting "Fake Clouds" on location with Jeff Walker, lighting director, Danny Sariano, 1st assistant camera, and Campbell behind the camera.

thing so tangible that other people could enjoy."

Campbell's film didn't take any prizes at Sundance, but it was well received, both Campbell and Kinsey said, and drew many favorable comments. For Palmer, seeing the film version of his story go to Sundance was "the biggest thing I've done," and he found an immense thrill is seeing it screened in front of an audience of experts. "You have a full theater of film people, who gasp at the right moments, laugh at the right moments and get the story," he said. Palmer's one regret is that the film wasn't longer.

With Sundance now behind them, the trio is now working on other projects together. One film in post-production, "Children in a Jar," is about homeless children in Nicaragua who are hooked on huffing glue, and how drug dealers lure these children into working for them. "I'm just waiting to get funding to finish it," she said. "But I have lots of other projects lined up. As an independent filmmaker, you have to have things in various phases of development."

Campbell is also working on a documentary, "Leaving A Legacy," which she is doing for WHYY in Philadelphia, and features celebrities talking about their environmental interests. To date she has interviewed people like actors Val Kilmer and Michael York, actress Allie McGraw, ex-baseball star Stan Musial and Indian activist Russell Means. Another project centers on caregivers who are providing essential medical care for spouses, children or other family members. The opening of trout fishing season in Pennsylvania, of the humor of throngs of people with differing stream-side philosophies, pitting their wits against fish, is the subject of another.

While Campbell enjoys documentaries, films like the fictional "Fake Clouds" provides a nice switch since it allows her more control of her work.

"With documentaries, you are along for the ride," she said. "Films like 'Fake Clouds' provide a different form of artistic expression."

Miller wins the "name game"

Ever wonder what is the most popular last name of Millersville alumni? Well, Miller, of course! We have searched our database and found approximately 485 Millers who have graduated from the University, followed closely by the surname of Smith. Alumni Snapshot

Verne Hauck, '69

Retirement seems to agree with Verne Hauck, former Industry & Technology professor at MU. Retiring in January 2002, he jumped on his 2001 Harley Road Glide FLRT1 to see the country and pay homage to the Harley-Davidson's centennial. By Christmas, he had logged over 100,000 miles on his cross-country trek-earning the badge of long-distance riders, membership in the Iron Butt Association.

He rode through four Canadian provinces, a bit of Mexico and 48 states (missing only Hawaii and Rhode Island). He dealt with hurricanes and headwinds, rush hour traffic in areas like Seattle and dodged grizzlies in Alaska. He also did a "four-corners ride;" a 21-day journey to the country's four outer-most points-Madawaska, Maine; Key West, Florida; San Ysidro, California and Blaine, Washington.

Although Verne has been riding motorcycles for the past 35 years, long-distance riding is a passion he found only a few years ago. "I can ride much further on a motorcycle than I could stand to drive in a car. I'm a hands-on person; with a motorcycle you have to be constantly alert, and you're actively involved in the motoring process," he explained.

The Harley is one of two motorcycles he owns, the other is a BMW. "The Harley is a heavy road machine, and it's equipped for the long haul," he said. This bike has a windscreen, AM/FM/CB radio and an auxiliary gas tank that extends the range the bike can travel with a fill-up to 400 miles. "The gas tank is what really sets this motorcycle apart. People really notice that," he remarked.

In addition, the helmets are equipped with an intercom system, so he and wife, Bonnie '92, can talk back and forth during rides. Bonnie has her own Harley, and the couple rides every year to Daytona for Bike Week.

"I've met a lot of great people," he said. And he'll probably meet many more as he continues to log the miles.

After graduating from MU in 1981 with a degree in business administration, she joined the Jay Group as an account executive and apprenticed in almost all areas of the company.

Under her leadership, she has empowered her employees to share in the successes and investments of the company. She has also established flexible work schedules.

Student-Athlete Spotlight

Laura Harris

From the time she was six years old, a good deal of Laura Harris's life has revolved around sports. She played basketball and soccer before she found her passion—softball.

As she grew and learned the mechanics of pitching, Harris developed an array of pitches—from rising fastballs to drop balls to changeups-that would bedevil opposing batters for four years at Warrior Run High School in Watsontown, Pa.

In 2001 as a high school senior, Harris, a right-hander, fanned a whopping 352 batters in 179 innings, which accounted for nearly twothirds of her team's total outs. All told, she struck out 791 batters during her scholastic

Numerous college scholarship offers beckoned for Harris's services, but Millersville and head coach Kathy Cummings hit a "home run" when she accepted a partial scholarship offer.

Why did she choose MU? "Millersville's meteorology department is one of the best in the country, and I knew I could step in and compete right away [for the softball

As a freshman during MU's 2002 season, she shattered the previous club season strikeout mark of 61 with more than three times that amount-203. And, in the process, she also broke the school career "K" mark of 190. Her 12 victories in '02 also set a host of new records.

It earned her a rare honor for a freshman—selection to the All-PSAC Eastern Division First Team—and gained a reputation as one of the league's toughest hurlers.

This past spring, she battled through an injury-plagued and added 99 strikeouts to her resume. Although she finished only 6-9 overall, she gained the respect of the league coaches with an all-conference second team honor.

"Laura is a team player in the truest sense," said Cummings. "When she is 'on', her velocity and control make things tough for opposing batters. Her work ethic is exceptional. She demands excellence from herself and that rubs off positively on her teammates."

Golf team wins PSAC, NCAA-II regional crowns

The spring sports campaign was highlighted by a group of five golfers, all underclassmen, who achieved championship honors at the state and regional levels.

Coach Scott Vandegrift's MU linksmen captured their second PSAC tournament championship on Easter Sunday by one stroke over Clarion, and followed with an impressive six-stroke victory at the NCAA Division II East Regional Championships in early May at Syracuse, N.Y.

The Marauders qualified as a team for the first time to the NCAA-II National Championships, held in the Cascade Range in southern Oregon, May 20-23. Sophomore Scott Micklewright finished second in the PSAC tourney and shared fifth place honors with junior Brad Gordon at the 54-hole NCAA regional tournament. Juniors Chris Killiany and Trevor Pope joined Micklewright on the All-PSAC team, and sophomore Adam Black completed the Marauder lineup. All five players shot between 76 and 79 strokes per round.

Vandegrift, who completed his 18th year at the helm, earned PSAC Coach of the Year honors from a vote of his peers for the third time.

Post retirement reflections

- and a task to complete

My path to Millersville was not a direct one: I am a Palestinian-American, coming to this country in 1953.

As I pursued my college education, I intentionally roamed the United States from coast-to-coast. By the time I came to Millersville, I had attended ten universities and taught in six, including the American University of Beruit, worked as a researcher in the computer industry, and spent two years abroad as an economic adviser. Knowing that I would be grounded in a place of my choice to teach and raise a family, I tried my best to get a second education about life beyond academia through my travels.

Millersville University, of all places on this earth, happily turned out to be the institution where I anchored by career. When I joined Millersville in 1968, it was a much different place than it is today. It seems like a short time ago, when fascinated by Lancaster's heritage, location and the abundance of pheasants in the landscape, that I chose to make a home here.

My first assignment at Millersville was to chair and develop the newly formed economics department. Soon after that I was elected dean of social sciences to work with faculty members from six academic departments to develop new ideas and programs like business administration, social work, and urban studies. The objective was to bring all that under one roof in the, then, newly built the McComsey Hall (which is now under expansion and renovation).

Four years of administration was challenging, but I was anxious to return to the classroom. I found, too, that my consulting work which led me to developing countries and missions for the United Nations, enhanced my teaching in the classroom.

Expanding on this concept, I developed a seminar course on how applied economics related to the local economy. The course on the economy of Lancaster County (Economics 488) was first offered on an experimental basis and progressed into an annual offering during my last ten years of service.

A core of key Lancaster economic decision-makers were invaluable to the success of the the seminar-and to the ideas which grew from the experience. Not only did they faithfully come every semester to speak about their roles, they guided the students through applied local economy economic issues relating to agriculture, manufacturing, and services like tourism and financial institu-

With the help of my students and colleagues in the department, this issue-oriented approach was further developed into an annual conference dedicated to the regional economy. It highlighted a presentation by a prominent speaker on a timely topic relevant to the regional economy. Once again, the key advisers from the local economy were enthusiastic in their support. It provided a very positive learning experience for the students, as well as a needed forum for leaders impacting on the local economy.

Through the working partnership with many of Lancaster's business and industry leaders, it became apparent that there was a lack of local economic data available-a situation my students had regularly encountered in their research for the course. It became obvious that a centralized economic database was needed. The systematic analysis of economic data and interpretations of derived statistics, so vital to sound economic planning, can best be made in an academic environment and not by competing entities within the local economy.

This led to my remaining unfinished task. My hope is for the establishment of a center of economic research at Millersville University. This center will provide a focus for gathering and disseminating important data regarding the local economy, with access to fee-based research and consulting projects > for area businesses, and on-going support to student projects.

> > A partnership between University and local governments and businesses, complement-not compete with, or overlap with-the missions of organizations in the center's mission would
