Holocaust Conference hosts UN official General Dallaire

The parallels between the Rwandan genocide of 1994, in which Hutus slaughtered 800,000 Tutsis in 100 days, and the massacre of six million Jews in Europe were explored at Millersville's annual Holocaust Conference.

The conference, whose theme was "What have we learned from the Holocaust? Twenty-five years of Memory and Genocide in the Contemporary World," was held April 2 - 4. Millersville's annual Holocaust Conference is the longest running academic-based gathering of its kind in the world—and one of the most well-respected.

On Saturday, April 2, there was a showing of the film The Last Just Man. The film features Lt. General Roméo Dallaire, who desperately tried to warn the world about the Rwandan genocide—the worst massacre of people since World War II.

The next day, April 3, Dallaire appeared in person for his presentation as the Aristides de Sousa Mendes keynote lecturer. The former Canadian commander of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Rwanda and Uganda, is the author of Shake Hands with the Devil, a chilling account of the "unfolding apocalypse" that he witnessed.

Highlights of the conference included the Reynold Koppel Lecture on why the 20th century was the century of genocide. Jerry Fowler, director of the Committee on Conscience, United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, discussed the role of the Holocaust in combating genocide. The conference presenters included scholars and experts on the genocide in Armenia, Rwanda, Bosnia, Cambodia, and other areas in the 20th and 21st centuries.

MU timeline on website

To celebrate Millersville's 150th anniversary, archives students developed a Millersville University timeline. This new exhibit will be a permanent addition to the Special Collections website.

The website is: <http://sc.millersville.edu/timeline/index.cfm>

Student Ryan Meier developed the initial framework, and Mark Gormley created the exhibit using Flash. Kevin Heller assisted with text. The web exhibit was partially funded through a Pennsylvania Historical & Museum Commission Local History Grant.

The stained glass window over the main entrance in Biemesderfer Center was presented to the Normal School by the Class of 1909 and was dedicated to Dr. Andrew R. Byerly, a beloved language professor.

The words "Climb though the rocks be rugged" are part of the window. According to a description of the window in the March 21, 1911, issue of the Lancaster New Era:

"The central panel displays a figure of a youth struggling up the rugged foot path of a high mountain with an expression of never failing determination, typifying the student in his struggle to obtain character and wisdom by climbing the Alps of knowledge. ... The two outermost panels each bear the school shield and under the one is written the word 'class' and the other '1909.'"

Fallen "initial" tree

Over a hundred years old, the magnificent 95-foot-tall beech tree adjacent to the lake met its demise on the weekend of December 11-12, 2004, due to high winds.

The tree, believed to have been planted on campus around 1900, had carvings on its trunk up to 25 feet above the ground. It was known as the "initial" or "engraved" tree and carried numerous declarations of love – and other comments – from generations of Millersville students.

According to Kevin Bevenour, campus grounds supervisor, the tree "definitely was at its full maturity." As seen in the above photo taken in the fall, the tree had been heavily leaning toward one side. A neighboring beech tree is also showing signs of decline since last season and will be monitored.

Plans call for replacing the fallen tree. But, for many, a little bit of Millersville history is gone forever.

New campus signage system

A new signage system is a hit with students, visitors and the campus community.

Writes MU student, Tyler Prickett, in a letter to President McNairy, "A multitude of new black and yellow signs with white letters have been springing up all over campus and I must say – they look AMAZING!...Now, as newcomers enter George Street they are greeted by a gorgeous Millersville University sign complete with lights and flowers, banners hanging from every utility pole and informational signs at every turn! Talk about user friendly!"

Four Corners International Festival - May 19-21

Enjoy cultures from the around the world without traveling further than Millersville. Four Corners Festival: An International Gathering of Art, Theatre, Music and Dance, sponsored by Millersville University, is scheduled for Thursday to Saturday, May 19-21.

The daytime events are geared to family and children's education through workshops and hands-on activities such as mask making, theater performances, storytelling, wheat weaving, and book making will be offered. The evening events focus on dance and concerts for the family. On the evening of May 19, the Pennsylvania Academy of Music Children's Choir will perform at the BENECON Amphitheater located next to McComsey Hall.

Throughout the festival, the Tibetan Monks from the Drepung Loseling Monastery will create a Mandala sand painting . This is a painting of millions of grains of sand placed on a flat surface. The design follows geometric shapes or ancient spiritual symbols.

The events are open to the public. For more information, call 717-872-3298 or visit www.millersville.edu/~art

MU People

Deaths

Dr. Paul H. Nichols, professor emeritus, earth sciences (1967-1995), passed away on January 6. He had been in the U.S. Navy and retired with the rank of Commander. In 1976, he received the Commonwealth's Distinguished Teaching Chair, which recognized him for "his ability to motivate non-science students" and "individualize his teaching to include all levels of student ability." He was chairman of the Department of Earth Sciences until his retirement in 1995. In 2000, MU dedicated the Nichols House in his honor.

He is survived by his wife Barbara Breen Nichols, also a MU retiree and former assistant director of alumni services at MU, and two daughters. Contributions in his memory may be sent to the Dr. Paul H. Nichols Scholarship Fund, c/o Development Office, Millersville University, P.O. Box 1002, Millersville, PA 17551.

Paul Nichols

Paul Talley

Dr. Paul M. Talley, professor emeritus, passed away on November 18, in Forest Grove, Oregon. He was a professor in the Department of Communication and Theatre from 1965-1997.

In 1965, Talley was hired as the first Ph.D. in the humanities and social sciences at Millersville State Teacher's College. During his years at Millersville he taught a variety of theater and speech classes, but his passion was acting and directing and he guided the transformation of Dutcher Hall into the Rafters Theatre. In 1980, Talley brought the Loeb costume collection to the campus.

His family suggested that remembrances can be contributed to Department of Communication and Theatre, c/o Development Office, Millersville University, P.O. Box 1002, Millersville, PA 17551.

Kathryn B. Hill, faculty emerita, died on March 1. She served as dean of women at Millersville for four years before joining the Department of Health and Physical Education, where she was a faculty member from 1951 until retiring in 1968. In the late 1960s, she became co-owner of the Clothes Tree.

Kathryn B. Hill

As dean of women, Hill guided MU women in their education as well as their personal lives. She made an effort to get to know all of the female students, and formed lasting friendships with many.

She was inducted into the Marauder Athletic Hall of Fame in October 2004. Hill coached varsity basketball, tennis, and field hockey, and was adviser to the swimming team. She guided the Millersville State College women's tennis team from 1961-1968, earning a 28-14-1 record—including three consecutive undefeated seasons.

Carol J. Myers, associate professor of music emerita, passed away on February 25. She had been a faculty member in the Department of Music from 1974-1994.

Carol J. Myers

She began teaching at MU after many years as a music teacher in public schools. Affectionately known as "Mom Myers," she mentored a generation of music educators as a supervisor of student teachers and director of Millersville's music education program. She also directed Chanteurs (the women's choir) and the Handbell Ensemble. She served as the first female president of the local APSCUF chapter (1983-85).

Contributions in her memory be sent to "The Carol J. Myers Memorial Music Education Scholarships," c/o the Development Office, Millersville University, P.O. Box 1002, Millersville, PA 17551.

Letter to the Editor

Millersville Review,

In your summer/fall 2004 issue of the Review, you incorrectly noted, "1863...For the only time in Millersville's history, graduation ceremonies were not held."

Graduation ceremonies were not held in December 1977 due to budget cuts. When I graduated, I walked into a room in Ganser Library. Two men were standing there with a stack of diplomas. I told them my name. They found my diploma and one of them handed it to me. We shook hands. I left.

One of the most controversial pieces of educational legislation ever passed by the federal government, the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 (NCLB), faced some tough grading at a town hall meeting at Millersville University on February 9.

Some 150 education students, professors, teachers, administrators and parents attended the meeting, which gathered a panel of leading school officials, educators and legislators to discuss the ramifications of the law and its impact on school districts and future teachers.

The main presenter was Dr. Adam Gamoran, director of the Wisconsin Center for Education Research at the University of Wisconsin. Dr. Jane Bray, dean of Millersville's School of Education, served as moderator for the program that included Gamoran and five panelists: Caroline Allen, Pa. Parent-Teacher Association; Scott Boyd, Pa. State Representative, Robert Frick, Lampeter-Strasburg School District; Jeff Smink, Pa. Department of Education; and Jim Testerman, Pa. State Education Association.

"The fact is that there is no easy solution in facing up to the dilemmas in American education," said Gamoran.

NCLB represents the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 and includes much of the funding for education, including the Title I program serving educationally disadvantaged youth in high poverty schools. In short, the legislation places the most significant demands on schools ever made by the federal government, risking the potential failure of school districts throughout the United States.

NCLB requires high academic standards in English, mathematics and science through English and mathematics assessment tests administered annually in grades 3-8 and once in grades 10-12, and through science assessment in three grade levels.

"And there are consequences for not meeting these standards. There are tough sanctions and the consequences are very serious," said Gamoran. While raising the standards of American education is important, Gamoran explained that four dilemmas stood in the "way of the success of NCLB. How high do we set the bar? What is progress? What do standardized tests measure? Is it fair to set the same standards for all?"

These questions plague educators who are attempting to meet the new standards. Gamoran reported that "no actual school has met the standards," questioning whether or not it is actually possible to do so.

Meeting the Adequate Yearly Progress (AYP) standards means that all students must attain a proficient level of achievement by the 2013-14 school year. The AYP levels have been established by calculating a starting point through a formula using data from the 2001-02 school year.

What makes meeting the standards especially challenging is that all students are judged by them, including students with disabilities, limited English proficient students, educationally disadvantaged students and students in each major racial and ethnic category. Plus, the evaluation of all students is based on the same tests.

The consequences of not demonstrating AYP could lead to a spiral of failure, in which the best teachers and the best students abandon more challenged school districts, thus contributing to their failure.

Gamoran suggested that educators need more incentives and fewer sanctions, in much the same way that students tend to thrive when they are rewarded, rather than punished.

MU alumni Rep. Scott Boyd '80 and Dr. Robert Frick '66, '69 were among the expert panelists.

The panelists were even more critical of the impact of NCLB. Dr. Robert Frick, superintendent of the Lampeter-Strasburg School District, called No Child Left Behind "a one size fits all piece of legislation created by federal legislators who are experts on education because they once went to school."

"There should be more focus on general improvement, before talking about 100 proficiency," said Smink.

has met the standards"*

STAINED GLASS WINDOWS

Millersville University's magnificent stained glass windows are intertwined with the history of the institution.

In 1905, Millersville's first stained glass window, was installed in the chapel in Old Main. The window, "Socrates Teaching the Youth of Athens," was a gift from the faculty and cost $150.

Subsequent windows were sponsored by graduating classes from 1868-1907. The Class of 1904 began the trend by sponsoring the "Hope" window. The face depicted in the glass is the likeness of a Lancaster child, whose mother was a member of the class of 1904.

In all there was a series of 14 stained glass windows designed and installed in the chapel. The windows illustrated themes such as Justice, Science, Truth, Charity, Education, Faith and Christianity.

When Old Main was razed in 1965 to make way for Ganser Library, all 14 windows were removed and put in storage.

After more than twenty years of being packed away, several of the windows were restored and installed throughout campus.

At right, Biemesderfer Center's stained glass windows glow at night. Dr. Eliphalet Oram Lyte, principal of Millersville from 1887-1912, designed the windows and their placement.

In 1986, three windows—History, Art and Literature—were installed in the lobby of Ganser Library, the site where Old Main originally stood. The windows cost $3,000 each to restore, at that time. Today, it is fair to say that the windows are priceless.

Leo Shelley, associate library professor, summed it up years ago when he noted that "the stained glass windows are one of the few visible tokens of Millersville history."

In addition to Ganser and Gordinier, the original windows are now displayed in Hash-Bassler Hall, Caputo Hall and Biemesderfer Center. Unfortunately, a few of the windows are beyond repair.

The windows from the chapel measure three feet wide by fourteen feet high.

At the top of each is the alumni badge. The Normal school class pin design—Astra—is depicted in the form of a seven-pointed star with the letters A-D A-S-T-R-A placed in the points (pictured above and in the windows on the next page). The Latin phrase "Ad astra" translates into "toward the stars."

The bottom pane of the windows shows a lamp in front of a key-stone (see below). This symbolizes a lamp of learning for the education acquired at Millersville. Placed behind the lamp is a keystone representing the support of the school by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

As part of the 150th anniversary theme of "celebrating tradition and innovation," a display of three etched glass panels was commissioned and installed in the entryway of Bolger Conference Center at Gordinier Hall.

The panels depict three distinctive eras in the history of the University, along with quotes from presidents of those time periods.

"The stained glass windows are one of the few visible tokens of Millersville history."

Above, four major professions—medicine, law, theology and education—are represented in the side windows of Biemesderfer Center's Sherts Board Room. Of the original windows from Old Main's chapel, the top pane features the seven-pointed "astra" star. The bottom panel depicts the lamp of learning backed by Pennsylvania's keystone.

Three stained glass windows—Prosperity, Christianity and Faith, from the Classes of 1906, 1886 and 1905, respectively—grace the wall of the Old Main Room in the Bolger Conference Center.

Campaign REPORT

In all, over $40 million in private and public funds were generated to improve facilities and the student experience at Millersville University.

Investing in Millersville University and its future is a goal supported by many.

Five years ago the University embarked on a fund raising effort to generate $36 million to improve its learning facilities and scholarship programs. On December 31, 2004, the campaign closed, having generated $40 million and exceeding its goal by over 11 percent. More than 5,000 gifts were received from alumni, faculty and staff, parents, friends, businesses and others towards goals in support of the schools of education, humanities and social sciences, mathematics and science, and of student affairs programs in men's and women's athletics, student leadership programs, and alcohol abuse prevention.

The campaign represented multiple objectives and priorities. Facing the 21st century and the university's 150th anniversary, the efforts were positioned to focus on the three academic schools, student affairs and athletics, and University-wide initiatives such as scholarships and campus infrastructure.

The campaign brought in $15.2 million in private gifts; Commonwealth ($15 million) and University revenues ($10 million) added $25 million.

Critical to the campaign's accomplishments was University support through bond funding, which contributed to the construction and renovation of Roddy

Hall (part of Caputo Hall), McComsey Hall, and Osburn Hall.

In addition, MU provided funds toward the $2.9 million for campus beautification projects. More than $6 million was raised for student scholarships.

One of the campaign objectives, funding for the new School of Education building where Landes Hall now stands, will be continuing. A total of $7 million is needed to complete MU's first "green" building; the focused campaigns brought in $6.3 million toward this goal.

After the . Tsunami

STORY BY PAT COULSON

On December 26, 2004, an Indian Ocean earthquake—reported to be the second-largest quake in recorded history—set off a massive tsunami across South Asia. Even months later, the death toll continues to climb with estimates of 183,000 people dead and more than 100,000 still missing. The tsunami's devastation has been unimaginable.

Dr. Henry "Hank" Fischer III, director of MU's Center for Disaster Research and Education, and Joseph E. Trainor '02, Fischer's former research assistant, are conducting post-tsunami research funded by the National Science Foundation.

In late January, Trainor visited Sri Lanka and India as a member of a four-person reconnaissance team. For Trainor, a graduate student at University of Delaware's Disaster Research Center (DRC) and a project coordinator at the Center, it was a prestigious assignment and an opportunity to do field work relating to one of the world's biggest natural disasters.

"We had a good idea of what the conditions were going to be like upon our arrival," Trainor said. "Prior to traveling, we had been collecting news reports from American sources as well as sources that were local to the disaster."

However, the pictures and news reports did not fully prepare them for destruction of that magnitude. "We knew what to expect, but those expectations take on a deeper qualitative meaning when you are actually there talking to the people, or standing in what looks like a beach and realize that where you are was the site of 150 homes or a major market."

Earthquake Engineering Research Institute (EERI) typically sends engineers to earthquake sites. For this situation, the EERI invited DRC to put together a complete social science team to join in the reconnaissance effort.

The purpose of the trip was to identify important social issues that warrant future study. The urgency of the research revolved around the need to gather perishable data as it is happening. Record keeping is one of the first "normal" tasks that falls by the way side because of a crisis situation and valuable information can be lost forever.

Disasters are not independent of the social structure that they impact. Understanding human behavior and recognizing the cultural, developmental and social organizational differences is important to recovery activities. For example, the Western-style disaster response plans rely on highly organized professional systems. "You've got to have a plan—a basis to begin responding," Trainor noted.

People's risk perception and their response—whether to stay or flee—is often influenced more by their neighbors than an official government evacuation order. "Person-to-person" communication plays a vital role in bringing people together and in building the trust that is essential to really understanding what is going on. "People need to translate information into something that is meaningful to them," said Trainor.

During his two weeks in the hardest hit areas, Trainor was moved by the gracious hospitality and gratitude of the people he met.

"In one village in India, the villagers insisted that we come to a meeting area they had constructed of palm leaves and lashed branches. They had us sit down and brought each member a soda—insisting that we drink them even though they did not take any for themselves." He recalled, "These people who had lost everything only a month prior to our arrival were offering something that is a very special honor in their lives.... It was very moving and humbling."

In all, Trainor regarded the trip as "an absolutely fantastic experience" and hopes to return to the area.

Meanwhile, Dr. Hank Fischer, Trainor's mentor, traveled to Thailand in April. His mission is a different one. Fischer coordinating three teams of researchers studying the sociological effects of mass burials resulting from the tsunami. In addition to these teams, he is collaborating with the Asian Disaster Preparedness Center in Bangkok.

In the weeks and months following the tsunami, Thailand had to abandon Buddhist burial traditions. Because of the huge number of bodies and risk of disease, the government decided to bury the bodies in mass graves. Interviewing tsunami survivors and those involved in the mass burials will help to gauge the level of emotional stress.

Relief efforts from around the world are geared toward meeting the material needs of the residents. But beyond the basic necessities, recovery depends on the people. And Fischer and Trainor are both working to help victims of the tsunami and other incidents cope with the aftermath of disaster.

Graduate Studies

NANCY EASON

"Each graduate program has unique features to meet the needs of enrollees."

Graduate Studies at Millersville allows for flexibility in completion of degrees and certificates, a feature much appreciated by contemporary graduate students. As individual professional and personal lives experience transitions, they are in and out of active coursework. Most graduate students study part time and live within a 100-mile radius of the campus.

These programs also highlight the "dream college" quality of MU's graduate studies programs. Top-notch faculty and courses, convenience, and flexibility are frequently expressed sentiments in post-master's alumni recollections. Anne Carroll '94, '02 states, "If MU offered a doctoral degree, I would be the first to sign up."

"Currently, 1,000 people are enrolled in graduate studies courses; however thousands have an active status," according to Dr. Steven R. Centola, interim dean of graduate studies and research. He has held this interim post for almost three years and has been a professor of English at MU for twenty years.

"Motivational forces from individuals and the teaching profession led to the creation of the M.Ed. degree," said Centola. "With 30 credits of graduate coursework, individual teachers could move from a provisional certificate to permanent certification. This status also gave individuals the benefit of a move up on the salary scale."

Graduate Studies is now a multi-faceted, multi-departmental system offering a wide variety of master's degrees, supervisory certifications, post-baccalaureate certifications, and research fellowships. M.S., M.A. and M.B.A. degrees have followed.

Each graduate program has unique features to meet the needs of enrollees. The graduate psychology programs have the highest number of applicants. "The [psychology] department is highly renowned," noted Centola. Specializations include clinical, school psychology or school counseling. Unique arrangements have been made with the University of Pennsylvania's College of Medicine in which students can take courses at MU beyond their master's degree with up to 90 credits applied towards their doctorate degrees from Penn's College of Medicine.

One of the newest degree programs, the MBA, master's in business administration, has steadily increased its enrollment. Reflecting today's global economy, the MBA program has a decidedly international focus.

Carol Sears and Dr. Steven Centola, interim dean, discuss Millersville's growing graduate studies program.

The School of Education continues to lead in the number of graduate degrees and specialty certifications. It also offers what is perhaps the most unique of all of the offerings: educational leadership programs that can be given at off-campus locations. Involving a special training structure, a pre-determined number of students form a cohort, taking the same sequence of courses and graduating together.

Dr. Suzanne McCotter, chair of the Department of Educational Foundations, works with the post-baccalaureate program and advises graduate students in the M.Ed. in leadership for teaching and learning. The program started seven years ago and is still expanding. "We're proud to have many of our graduates doing a wonderful job as principals, department chairs, and teacher-leaders in local schools," McCotter explained.

A new master's degree is under development for teachers who want to continue being teachers rather than become school administrators. The master's in assessment, curriculum, and teaching "will have a focus on the use of assessment to guide decisions about instruction, and will also provide a number of different concentration areas geared toward student interest," said McCotter.

Since 1966, a total of 3,453 master's degrees (and specialty certifications) have been conferred by Millersville.

Of these, 2,502 are from the School of Education with 1,112 in elementary education.

"If MU offered a doctoral degree, I would be the first to sign up."

Additionally, Educational Foundations has developed strategies for helping non-traditional students switch from other careers into teaching. One example is MU's partnership with the School District of Lancaster to provide a year-long school-based experience for post-baccalaureate certification students.

Anne Carroll hadn't planned on a career in education. With a degree in biological sciences from the University of Delaware, she intended to specialize in microbiology and work in a laboratory setting. However, an opportunity arose to travel to Germany where she worked as a nanny. During this period, she discovered a love of children and had found her niche.

Carroll's initial experience with MU was for a teaching certificate and then a master's degree. Today Carroll is the principal of Marticville Middle School, and she is now mentoring a current master's student of the program.

One of the things that Carroll really appreciated about the cohort-based program was the opportunity to stop and have a time for reflection with instructors and the group after a very fast-paced day of teaching. "The professional level of dialogue that came with the classes was very refreshing and I came out rejuvenated," said Carroll.

This is not a program that ends upon degree receipt. "Trust is built within the cohort as well as great professional respect," said Carroll. As a result, there is an ongoing connection following graduation.

"While there are always surprises—that's what real life is all about—MU's program was top-notch and very applicable," said Carroll. She is quick to emphasize that this program was "extremely rigorous."

Linda Gail Baylor '93, '00 and Jerry Egan '98, '04 are also graduates of the master's in leadership for teaching and learning degree and can't say enough about their cohort experiences.

"The cohort model is at the core of the program; we think that developing a model of collaboration and collegiality in future leaders is essential and try to institute it into their professional habits from the outset," said McCotter. Egan, currently assistant principal at Marticville Middle School, said that the cohort set up provided "a great way, a natural way, to network" as a result of getting to know eight to ten individuals pretty well.

Baylor, principal of Salisbury Elementary School in Pa., stressed the benefits of learning to navigate the process of leadership by means of the practical applications learned in the internship as well as partnering with a mentor working in a leadership position. "The advisers allow creative internship arrangements to meet the needs of the students," Baylor noted.

Egan described the experience of portfolio preparation in lieu of writing a thesis that demonstrated the cohort's skills in 40 competencies. Of the portfolios, "no two look alike because they represent individual journeys," noted Baylor.

"We need to be committed to what we preach," says Egan of a principle that was reiterated through the graduate program. In his case, this is reinforcing the idea of being a life-long learner. He has already enrolled in a doctoral educational leadership program at Immaculata University in Philadelphia.

The master's degree "helped develop my philosophy on executing leadership and adequately prepared me for my job," said Egan. "Power with people" is a theme that greatly influences the cohorts. Our program uses the concepts of leadership expert, Mary Parker Follett's ideas of 'power with' to develop moral and collaborative leaders, rather than leaders who make decisions in isolation," said McCotter.

When Baylor started her position as principal, the staff identified communications between teachers, staff and administration as an area of weakness. She was able to use the skills of problem solving, building relationships and viewing conflict as building blocks that were developed through the studies and shared experiences of the master's preparation. Baylor describes the development of a process that has enabled the staff to "turn conflict into problem solving opportunities and in the process has resulted in a stronger and closer school community. I was very well prepared to leave the program and step into a principal's position," Baylor said.

The Master of Education in Sport Management degree was established in 1999 at MU and has quickly grown in size and reputation. Millersville University offers the only M. Ed. in sport management degree program in Central Pennsylvania. Graduates of MU's sport management program are currently employed as leaders and administrators in sport medicine, media, marketing, facility and event management, education, professional, intercollegiate, and interscholastic athletic programs, campus recreation, the fitness industries, and community recreation.

Dr. Rebecca Mowrey is the program coordinator for the sport management degree. "Sports is big business with nearly six million employees worldwide and sport-related industries generating an estimated $350 billion in the United States alone. The need for professionally prepared sport managers is not likely to decline in the near future as we see an escalation in 24/7 sport-specific media, an ever increasing specialization of sport merchandise, national sport leagues expanding their global competition, and more interest in fitness as well," said Mowrey.

MU's curriculum is built upon the North American Society of Sport Management Standards and includes course work in sport marketing, sport law, communication, organizational leadership, public relations, sport finance, facility and event management, and research. Students have a choice of completing one of two concentrations: athletic management or athletic coaching. Both concentrations include the completion of the sport management core courses plus specialized courses relating to the concentration.

In response to student feedback, MU currently offers courses in a variety of formats to maximize student access to degree requirements while providing convenience and flexibility for students' schedules.

"In addition to the traditional semester-long course format, with classes meeting for three hours one night a week, we offer intensive weekend-only courses, 100% distance learning (DL) formats and blended formats that combine face-to-face classes with DL. We also have a 'summer-only' format for students who wish to complete their degree during summer semesters," said Mowrey.

Completion of an internship is a requirement in the athletic management concentration. MU students have completed internships with major league

Dean named

Dr. Victor S. DeSantis

Dr. Victor S. DeSantis will join Millersville University as the Dean of Graduate Studies and Research effective July 1, 2005. He comes to Millersville from Bridgewater State College, Mass., where he held the position of executive assistant to the president.

Dr. DeSantis was the lead staff member for Bridgewater's involvement in a new regional public higher education consortium, piloting projects in areas such as intercampus collaboration, communication and marketing, and special events.

He has substantial experience in graduate curriculum design, student recruitment and assessment, and program review and accreditation.

DeSantis earned a Ph.D. in political science from American University.

The exposure to a variety of faculty members and their expertise keeps the classes interesting and extremely relevant to the course topics.

Swarr noted the importance of being taught by experienced and knowledgeable full-time faculty members, rather than primarily adjunct faculty, ensures that faculty members are accessible for consultation and are experienced in pedagogy.

Jeff credits his sport psychology courses with Stanley J. Kabacinski, chairperson of the Department of Wellness and Sport Sciences and a sport management faculty member, with providing him with motivational techniques that work equally well in his classroom and coaching environments. Kabacinski's coaching experiences at East Stroudsburg and Millersville universities, coupled with his passion for sport psychology, results in dynamic classes. Kabacinski is a nationally recognized instructor of the American Sport Education Program and he is also a motivational consultant for the NCAA Sport Sciences Speaker's Bureau.

During the past six years, nearly 100 students have completed their M. Ed. in sport management degree. There are 133 students currently enrolled in the program, with students ranging in age from 21 to 56.

baseball, minor league hockey, the Pennsylvania Interscholastic Athletic Association, Inc. (PIAA), Penn State's Bryce Jordon Center, the Giant Center, the athletic departments of the University of Michigan, Florida State, Millersville and West Chester universities, Lebanon Valley, Messiah, Elizabethtown, York and Franklin & Marshall colleges, and numerous interscholastic athletic departments.

Jodi Good, '02, Shelby Linton-Keedie '00, '04 and Jeff Swarr '00, '04 all speak highly regarding MU's accessible, dedicated and knowledgeable sport management faculty.

Jodi Good '02, assistant executive director of the PIAA and a current sport management graduate student, completed an internship with the Hershey Bear's marketing department. She credits her enrollment in MU's program as being instrumental to her appointment at PIAA. Good describes her classes, student-faculty interaction and internship experience as outstanding professional preparation for her career in sport management.

Shelby Linton-Keedie '00, '04 was a member of MU's women's varsity soccer team where she played halfback. Later, as an eighth-grade teacher at the West York Area School District, she added the title of soccer coach to her responsibilities. Her interest and involvement in sports lead her to MU's M.Ed. in sport management program. Interning with the athletic director of West York High School, she considers the internship experience to be a great learning opportunity that "allows one to tailor the program to your own interests and career goals."

Linton-Keedie's exposure to legal issues in her sport law course inspired her to pursue law school after she completed her M. Ed. in sport management in 2004. She is currently in her first year at Dickinson School of Law, and still involved with sport management.

Jeff Swarr '00, '04 is an itinerant learning support teacher at Lampeter-Strasburg High School, where he co-teaches earth science and biology. As a special education teacher, he emphasizes motivational strategies for students. Additionally, Swarr is the assistant baseball coach for Franklin & Marshall College in Lancaster. The concentration in athletic coaching within the M.Ed. in sport management was of special interest to him.

Furthermore, Swarr's coaching responsibilities made scheduling courses a challenge. However, the flexibility and creativity in the sport management course schedule enabled it to work.

But for Swarr and other students in the sport management program, it's the faculty that makes the program so outstanding. In total, seven full-time faculty in MU's Department of Wellness and Sport Sciences serve as members of the graduate sport management faculty.

Bring your old photos to share with friends or join in a fun-filled game of volleyball out back. Show your children where you used to live, call your old school pals and tell them you'll see them at the Landes reunion!

As parts of the old Landes building comes down, people will have an opportunity to purchase a Landes brick that will be recycled as part of the new courtyard area. This will keep your name as a permanent part of this building's exciting future.

Built in 1965, the then all-women's dormitory was named after Amanda Landes, who taught at MU from 1885 to 1920 and served as dean of women during her last five years at MU. T H E N E X T

1944 - 1980

During the start of this period, the United States and the world was engaged in the fight for freedom. World War II sent men into battle and women into the factories. Things would never be the same.

When the veterans returned, Millersville experienced an explosion in enrollment thanks to the G.I. Bill. The campus went from a sparse student body to bulging at the seams with classroom and housing needs.

All of this triggered a major building boom on campus that went from the 1960s to early 1970s, and totalled 21 buildings including many of the residence halls.

In the 1960s, civil rights, women's rights and the Vietnam War provided a call for change. Millersville students found their voice and influenced everything from student fees to curfews for women students.

1963 Before personal computers, there were personal, manual typewriters.

1962 Jenkins kindergarten class provided a terrific training ground for future elementary school teachers.

1966 The first swans appeared on Millersville's lake courtesy of the campus' secretarial association, now MUBA.

1965 Part of Millersville's original building—Old Main—was demolished. By 1970, all of the sections of the building had been leveled.

1967 Students and faculty participate in the "book walk," carrying 90,000 books from the Old Library (Biemesderfer) to the new library (Ganser).

1971 Abbie Hoffman, radical political activist, caused a stir when he spoke at Millersville.

1970 Students staged a march at President Duncan's house to petition for more campus housing for women.

1979 The nuclear accident at nearby Three Mile Island closed Millersville for a week.

1960

Student Spotlight

Toochi Udeinya

A native of Nigeria, Toochi Udeinya's family immigrated to the United States when he was two years old.

In Rockville, Maryland, he grew up playing—and loving—football. He was a running back until, according to Toochi, he got too tall for the gridiron and picked up a basketball. His talents on the court quickly blossomed and the 6-foot-6 forward was offered a scholarship to come and play at Millersville.

"I was offered such a great scholarship to come here and play basketball for this university, I would have been nuts to turn it down."

Udeinya has been a key component for the Marauder basketball team since his freshman year—leading in rebounds in three varsity seasons.

During this senior season, the three-time PSAC all-star has once again ranked among the PSAC rebounding leaders, averaging more than eight per game.

Head coach Fred Thompson said, "Toochi is a very important part of our team. This year he is our leading rebounder and is third in scoring. He is probably the most unselfish player I have ever coached and for a small forward he does great with defending bigger players."

An industrial technology major, Udeinya is conscientious about his studies. After graduation in May, he's looking forward to finding a job in his field where he can work with his hands.

But football is still one of his favorite pastimes. He enjoys playing pick-up touch football and also has served on the events staff for MU home football games.

Black & Gold Golf Classic

Golfers will hit the links at the beautiful Bent Creek Country Club in Lancaster County for what has become an annual tradition to benefit Marauder athletic scholarships. This year's affair will be held on Monday, May 2, with a 12:30 p.m. tee time.

The university has partnered with the Chapman Auto Group and Student Services, Inc. to make the day possible. As in the past an exciting day of golf, camaraderie and fun can be expected. However, this year the event will be packed with new and exciting twists.

For non-golfers, there will be a reception-only option this year. For $50, the event includes hors d'oeuvres, dinner, drinks and a live auction.

Also as part of the event, a drawing for a 2005 Ford Mustang, provided by Chapman, will be held. One thousand tickets, at $50 each, will be sold for a chance to drive away in the new sports car. Proceeds from the drawing will benefit Marauder athletic scholarships. The car drawing will be held during the awards reception following course play on May 2. Ticket holders need not be present to win.

To register for the golf outing or to purchase tickets for the car drawing, contact the Special Events office at 717-871-2308.

'Ville cagers excel as women win PSAC title and men finish second

The 2004-05 Millersville winter sports squads have provided excitement and spirited competition with abundant success.

In women's basketball, Coach Mary Fleig's Marauders captured the program's first PSAC tournament championship since 1987 (3rd overall) with a 76-71 victory over three-time defending conference champion California (Pa.) on March 5 at Pucillo Gymnasium.

The Marauders rattled off a modern era school record 15 consecutive wins to earn the automatic bid to the NCAA Division II tournament and they competed in East Region play in South Carolina. Junior guard Danielle Marshall, who was named the PSAC tourney's Most Valuable Player, joined senior forward Kristy Garner on the All-PSAC Eastern Division First Team. Garner became the first Marauder woman cager to record 1,000 points and 1,000 rebounds in a career, and only the 14th in PSAC history achieve the feat.

Fleig, who is closing in on 400 career victories, earned her fifth PSAC East Coach of the Year honor.

The Marauder men's basketball team, picked fifth in the Eastern Division in the preseason, confounded the experts and advanced all the way to the PSAC championship game, where they were denied the title by host Edinboro, 85-76, on March 5. Nevertheless, the 'Ville hoopsters achieved an at-large bid to the NCAA East Region tourney in North Carolina where they lost to Mount Olive.

Exciting freshman guard Charlie Parker earned PSAC East Rookie of the Year honors and paced a balanced attack in which all five MU starters averaged in double figures. Seven-year skipper Fred Thompson earned his second PSAC East men's coaching honor.

New Marauder head football coach

Joe Trainer has been selected as the new head football coach at Millersville University. He has been on the Villanova University coaching staff for the last eight seasons. This will be his first head football coaching assignment.

Coach Joe Trainer and his wife, Moreen, catch the Marauder spirit.

University President Dr. Francine G. McNairy said, "Coach Trainer is an educator first and foremost and is the right person to invigorate the Millersville football program."

Trainer noted that his philosophy as Millersville's head gridiron mentor will be to build character in his players. "I expect the student-athletes to be dedicated, disciplined and respected members of the University community who are serious about earning a degree and want to compete for the PSAC Eastern Division championship every year," he said.

"The game of football provides many opportunities for young men to grow into responsible, contributing adults," Trainer said. "Helping young men reach their goals and fulfill their potential on and off the field, in a constructive and positive manner, is the most satisfying aspect of coaching."

The past two seasons under Trainer's direction, Villanova led the NCAA Division I-AA affiliate Atlantic 10 Conference in total defense. In his eight-year tenure on the Main Line, working alongside legendary head coach Andy Talley, the Wildcats compiled a 62-32 overall record (42-25 conference mark) with two conference championships and two Lambert-Meadowlands Cup awards (1997 and 2002). In 1995 and 1996, Trainer served as defensive coordinator and linebackers coach at the University of New Haven, where he also served as UNH football program's academic coordinator. He began coaching in 1990 at Temple University.

A 1990 graduate of Dickinson College with a bachelor of arts degree in English, Trainer received a master's degree in education from Temple. He also earned a master's degree in counseling and human relations from Villanova in 2004.

Millersville University Campus, 1935

*A*n aerial view of the Millersville University campus in 1935 shows a small self-contained institution. Taking up the majority of the campus was Old Main. The original structure had been built in 1854 and it grew and grew and grew with additional buildings to accommodate more student resident rooms, class rooms, the dining room, library area, administration offices and the chapel. Beyond repair, demolition of some of Old Main's buildings started in 1965. Old Main North was the last to go in 1970.

Tucked next to Old Main is the oldest building on Millersville campus, its first gymnasium built in 1890 and now known as Dutcher Hall. Next is the Old Library, built in 1895, and is now called Biemesderfer Center. At the top left was the old Science building built in the late 1890s.

Seventy years later, two of the four campus buildings shown are still standing. Today Millersville University's campus spans 250 acres and has approximately 78 buildings.
