He is currently teaching at J.P. McCaskey High School in the School District of Lancaster, where he directs the Leon 'Buddy' Glover, Jr. Public Service Project. This initiative offers high school students an interdisciplinary service program designed to enrich the school, district, and city. Mealy is the founder and director of the National Institute for Customizing Education, a firm dedicated to providing research-based educational services to school districts nationwide. In this capacity, Mealy has worked as a curriculum writer for The Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change in Atlanta, Georgia.

His most recent books are Shades of Brown: The Biography of Jane Elliott and the Blue Eyes, Brown Eyes Exercise and the children's book Like a Champion: A Story About Building Confidence, coauthored with his son, Carter. Shades of Brown has been honored with the 2023 "Sunny" Book Award for best book in the education genre and is currently a contender for the Independent Book Publishers Association's education book of the year. Shades of Brown has been praised by Dr. Bernice A. King as "an insightful critique" and a "must read that resonates with the urgency of our times to overcome racial bias, prejudice, bigotry." Emory University philosophy professor George Yancy calls the book important for upholding "critical thinking, social diversity, and the humanities." Flatbush Pictures is currently using Shades of Brown as its key resource in the forthcoming film about the life of Jane Elliott. Mealy is also a regular contributor to Pennsylvania Heritage Magazine, where his writings explore the history of culture, politics, and sports in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

From 1998-2019, Mealy coached football at high schools in Lancaster County. As a head coach, he accumulated one of the best winning percentages in Central Pennsylvania, three times voted coach of the year, and two section championships.
