Biomedical Sciences (BMS) PhD

Overview:
The Biomedical Sciences Graduate Program with Options in Biochemistry and Molecular Genetics, Cellular and Integrative Physiology, Translational Therapeutics, and Virology and Immunology provides students curricular training with a unique focus on human health and disease and the opportunity to concentrate in one or more disciplinary approaches including biochemistry, biophysics, cell biology, genetics, immunology, pharmacology, physiology, structural biology, and virology. Students receive rigorous training that provides the skills necessary to be leaders in biomedical research and other endeavors, including education, law, journalism, and public policy. The Program is an interdepartmental program that engages faculty from twenty basic and clinical science departments. This broad-reaching Program provides students a wide ranging understanding of multiple disciplines with specific expertise in a chosen area, and encourages interdisciplinary research that is the hallmark of biomedical sciences in the 21st century.
Overview:
Great lawyers are first great students. And at Penn State’s Dickinson Law, you’ll learn in a supportive—yet highly challenging—environment, as you develop the skills necessary to practice law in an ever-changing world. Our carefully planned curriculum pairs a strong foundational understanding of national and transnational law with invaluable practice experience. We deliberately teach problem-solving skills and other core competencies in your first-year. You’ll then plan your upper-level curriculum around the concept of “The Lawyer as...” to acquire specialized substantive knowledge and other practical skills.

Graduate Programs:
Engineering Leadership Development: Minor, M.Eng. in Engineering Leadership and Innovation Management, and online graduate certificate in Engineering Leadership and Innovation Management

Overview:
Increasingly, successful engineers are expected to be well versed not only in technical engineering skills but also in so-called soft skills such as communications, ethics, entrepreneurial thinking, and professionalism. These areas of leadership and innovation set engineers apart and prepare them to be future global business leaders by providing training and experience in: identifying new business opportunities, effective project management, promoting internal innovation.

Already a recognized leader in engineering leadership development, Penn State’s College of Engineering has the resources to provide the advanced education to prepare engineers to be the type of leaders who are most sought after by corporations worldwide.

Graduate School Tips
from Dr. Don Martin,
Author of Graduate School Road Map:

1. Take time to do good research – start out with at least 15 to 20 options.
2. Do not rely solely on rankings, prestige or word of mouth when choosing the graduate programs to which you will apply.
3. Prepare to take the GRE, GMAT, LSAT or MCAT. If your first score(s) are not what you want, take the test at least one more time.
4. Remember, just as you are evaluating the kind of service provided to you by the graduate admissions office, your behavior and communication skills are being evaluated by the graduate admissions office.
5. Follow directions during the application process. Not doing so sheds light on how you might respond to policies and procedures as a student
6. Make sure you have considered the financial implications of your decision to pursue graduate study.
7. The most important determinant of your success is not the degree behind your name, but the motivation and initiative you have inside.
