Establishing and maintaining public trust and confidence is vital to the success and fulfilling the mission of Millersville University. As a public institution of higher education, our reputation is a most-valued asset. Each member of the University community must endeavor to preserve and protect this asset through principles of integrity, fairness, respect, and responsibility.

Developing and communicating these principles are critical to ensuring high ethical standards. These principles provide the framework and context that enables us to continually strive for excellence in our work and behavior.

To direct the conduct of the Division of Finance and Administration, we have endorsed the principles of integrity, fairness, respect, and responsibility, both in word, and action; and, therefore, strive:

(Integrity)

To conduct ourselves and our activities with the highest regard for the truth;

(Fairness)

To treat others and approach each activity with the highest regard for fair and equitable treatment;

(Respect)

To demonstrate appreciation and genuine concern for the individuality of others and their ideas; and

(Responsibility)

To be accountable for our actions, guardians of the University's best interest, and responsible stewards of the public's trust.

We are committed to integrating these principles into the institution's culture and to encourage ethical conduct throughout the University.
